Subject: El Pasoans Fighting Hunger Website Upgrade

Purpose

This memo will inform you about improvements that could be made to the El Pasoans Fighting Hunger website. During an interview with an El Pasoans Fighting Hunger employee, we found out that the website doesn't work correctly on mobile devices. They also told us they wished they had a button to translate the whole website into Spanish. From our own research, we found that the website has too much repetitive information and the layout needs updating. Our goal is to improve the El Pasoans Fighting Hunger website and help them with ideas for their redesign.

Findings

We gathered our findings from two sources: an interview with an El Pasoans Fighting Hunger employee and research on nonprofit website design and food insecurity in our community. During our fieldwork interview, the employee confirmed that the website doesn't work well on mobile devices. This is a big problem because many people in El Paso use smartphones as their main way to access the internet. They also told us that a Spanish translation option would be really helpful. El Paso has a large Spanish-speaking population, and without a Spanish toggle, many community members can't navigate the site or find information about programs they need.

Our research on nonprofit websites and food insecurity in El Paso supported what we learned from the interview. Our research showed us that food assistance websites need to be simple, have clear action buttons, and offer multiple languages. The people who need help most are often Spanish speakers and low-income families without regular access to computers, so mobile-friendly design and Spanish language options are essential. Right now, the El Pasoans Fighting Hunger website has way too much information all at once, which can overwhelm visitors. The menu bar is too thick and visually cluttered, and everything competes for attention instead of guiding people toward important actions like getting help or donating. Important contact information like the phone number, address, and location aren't easy to find.

The main issues we found are:

- No Spanish language toggle
- Too much information at once, overwhelming for visitors
- Cluttered menu bar — elements compete for attention instead of guide users
- No obvious action buttons (Get Help, Donate, Español, Phone #)
- Contact information and location not prominently displayed
- Website isn't mobile-friendly

Recommendations

We recommend creating a website redesign for El Pasoans Fighting Hunger. This is a print/digital project (Option 2: Website Design) that will visually show the changes we think would help the organization reach more people.

Our redesign will tentatively include:

- Spanish/English Toggle: A clear "Español" button at the top of the page so Spanish speakers can instantly switch the whole website. This addresses what the employee told us they needed and what the El Paso community needs.
- Cleaner Menu: We'll streamline the navigation menu so it only includes the most important categories. This reduces clutter and helps people find what they're looking for instead of getting confused.
- Prominent Action Buttons: We'll make "Get Help," "Donate," and "Volunteer" buttons stand out on the homepage so visitors immediately know what they can do.
- Contact Info on Top: Phone number, address, and a map will be placed at the top of the page so someone in crisis can find how to reach the organization right away.
- Mobile-Friendly Design: The whole redesign will work on phones and tablets, not just computers. All the buttons and information will be easy to use on a smartphone.

We'll create a visual mockup showing what these changes look like and how they improve the website as well as well reasoned and research-backed documentation on each recommended change. These changes will help El Pasoans Fighting Hunger reach more Spanish-speaking community members and people on mobile devices, directly supporting their mission to fight hunger in El Paso.
